

Transcript of Reagan's Speech to the U.N. General Assembly

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Sept. 22 (AP) — Following is a transcript of President Reagan's speech to the United Nations General Assembly, as recorded by The Associated Press.

Mr. President, Mr. Secretary General, honored guests and distinguished delegates: I am pleased to be in this chamber, the delegates' Meditation Room, a refuge from a world of strife and violence. We want to bring back the idea of worship. Dag Hammarskjöld once said about this room, "devotion to something which is greater and higher than we are ourselves."

It is just such devotion that gave birth to the United Nations, devotion to the dream of world peace and freedom, of human rights and democratic self-determination, of a time when, in those ancient words, "And they shall beat their swords into plowshares. Nations shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war anymore."

The United States remains committed to the U.N. For over 40 years, this organization has provided an international forum for harmonizing conflicting national interests and has made a significant contribution in such fields as peacekeeping, humanitarian assistance and eradicating disease.

Yet, no one knows better than those in this chamber how the noble ideas embodied in the charter have often remained unfulfilled. This organization itself faces a critical hour — that is usually stated as a fiscal crisis — but we can turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

Let me turn this "crisis" into an opportunity. The important reforms proposed by the Group of Experts can be a first step toward restoring the organization's status and effectiveness. The issue, ultimately, is not one of cash but of credibility.

President Reagan addressing session of the United Nations General Assembly. Behind him were, from left: Javier Pérez de Cuellar, Secretary about which weapons are the most dangerous and threatening to peace. The threat does not come from defensive systems, which are a shield against attack, but from offensive weapons — ballistic missiles that hurtle through space and can wreak such destruction on the surface of the earth — especially the Soviet Union's heavy accuracy ICBMs, with multiple warheads, which have no counterparts in size or number in any other country.

General; Humayun Rasheed Choudhury, President of General Assembly; and William B. Buffum, Under Secretary for General Assembly Affairs.

That is why the United States has long urged radical, equitable, verifiable reductions in these offensive systems. Note that I said reduction; for this is the real purpose of arms control: not just to codify the levels of today's arsenals, not just to channel their further expansion, but to reduce them, in ways that will reduce the danger of war. Indeed, the United States believes the prospect of a future strategic defense system, which would destroy without such weapons, is the ultimate goal of arms control.

I am pleased to say that the Soviet Union has now embraced our idea of radical reductions in offensive systems. At the Geneva summit last November, we agreed to intensify work in this area. Since then, the Soviets have made detailed proposals which, while not acceptable to us, appear to represent a serious effort.

So, we continue to seek a 50 percent reduction of American and Soviet arsenals — with the central focus on the reduction of ballistic missile warheads. If the Soviet Union wants only a lesser reduction, however, we are prepared to consider it but as an interim measure in other provisions as well, we have sought to take account of Soviet concerns. So there has been movement.

Similarly, in the area of intermediate-range nuclear forces, the United States seeks the total elimination of such missiles on global bases. Again, if the Soviet Union insists on pursuing such a goal in stages, we are prepared to consider an interim agreement without delay.

Soviet Response

To Proposals

All this gives me hope. I can tell you the exchanges between our two sides this summer could well have marked the beginning of a serious, productive negotiation on arms reductions. The ice of the negotiating stalemate could break — if both sides intensify their effort in the new round of Geneva talks and if we keep the promises we made in the Geneva summit.

For too long a time, however, the Soviet response has been to downplay the need for offensive reductions. When the United States began work on technology to make offensive nuclear weapons someday obsolete, the Soviets tried to make that the main issue — as if the main danger to strategic stability was a defense against missiles that is still on the drawing boards, rather than the menacing ballistic missiles themselves that already exist in excessive numbers.

Still, the United States recognizes that both the offensive and defensive sides of the strategic equation must be addressed. And we have gone far to meet Soviet concerns expressed in the Geneva summit. The use of strategic defensive systems. I have offered firm and concrete assurances that our S.D.I. could never be used to deploy weapons in space that can cause mass destruction on earth.

I have pointed out that the radical reduction we seek now in offensive systems would be additional insurance that S.D.I. could not be used to support a first-strike strategy. And our reference — from the beginning — has been to move forward cooperatively with the Soviets on strategic defenses, so that neither side will feel threatened and both can benefit from the strategic revolution S.D.I. represents.

3-Point Plan

Of the U.S.

The United States continues to respect the Antiballistic Missile Treaty — in spite of clear evidence that Soviets are violating it. We have told the Soviets that if we can both agree on radical reductions in strategic offensive weapons, we are prepared — right now — to sign an agreement with them on research, development, testing and deployment of strategic defense based on the following:

First, both sides would agree to confine themselves, through 1991, to defensive systems of strategic defense, which is permitted by the ABM Treaty, to determine whether advanced systems of strategic defense are technically feasible.

Second, a new treaty, signed now, would provide that if, after 1991, either side should decide to deploy such a system, that side would be obliged to offer a plan for sharing the benefits of that system with the other side.

Third, if the two sides can't agree after two years of negotiation, either side would be free to deploy an advanced strategic defense system, after giving six months' notice to the other.

As the United States has repeatedly made clear, we are moving toward a future of greater reliance upon strategic defense. The United States remains prepared to talk about how — under what ground rules and programs — we and the Soviet Union can do this cooperatively. Such strategic defenses, coupled with radical reductions in offensive forces, would represent a safer balance and would give future generations the opportunity to move beyond it — to the ultimate elimination of nuclear weapons from the face of the earth.

In addition to our proposals on offensive reductions and strategic defense, we have suggested new steps in another area: nuclear testing. Just as eliminating all nuclear weapons is our long-term goal, so too is a total ban on nuclear testing. But both must be approached with practical steps.

For the reason that for the future, we must rely on these weapons for the deterrence of war; thus the safety and reliability of our deterrent are themselves critical to peace.

The United States is proud of its record of nuclear safety and intends to maintain it.

2 Steps Toward Limits

On Nuclear Testing

Nevertheless, we are, as I said, ready now to take "two important steps toward limiting nuclear testing." First, we are ready to move forward on ratification of the Threshold Test Ban Treaty and the Partial Test Ban Treaty. Second, we are ready to reach an agreement on a moratorium on nuclear testing. We have proposed new ideas to make this possible.

Second, upon ratification of those treaties — and in association with a program to reduce and ultimately eliminate all nuclear weapons — we are prepared to discuss ways to implement a step-by-step moratorium program of limiting and ultimately ending nuclear testing.

These are steps we could take in the near future, to show the world we are moving forward. I therefore call upon the Soviet Union to join us in practical, attainable progress in limiting nuclear testing.

Just a few days ago, I received a reply from General Secretary Gorbachev to my letter of July 25. And, for the moment, let me simply say we are giving it serious and careful consideration.

As we move toward our goal of eliminating nuclear weapons, it is vital that we also address important imbalances in other kinds of weapons. This is why the United States has proposed a comprehensive ban on all chemical weapons, and why we and our allies have tried hard to break the stalemate in the conventional force negotiations in Vienna. And in the Stockholm Conference, a major advance has been achieved: a concrete new set of military confidence-building measures which includes inspections.

But we must remember from the experience of the 1970s that progress in arms control cannot be divorced from regional political developments. As I said at the beginning, political tensions cause the military competition, not the other way around.

Root Causes Of Tension

But, while the United States and the Soviet Union disagree over the roots of political tension, we do agree that regional conflicts could escalate into global confrontation. Last year from this rostrum, I presented a formula for peace which would apply to five critical, regional conflicts that are potential flashpoints for wider conflict.

I pointed out how difficult it is for the United States to accept Soviet assurances of peaceful intent, when 126,000 Soviet troops prosecute a vicious war against the Afghan people; when 140,000 Soviet-backed Vietnamese soldiers wage war on the people of Cambodia; when 1,700 Soviet advisers and 2,500 Cuban combat troops are involved in military planning and operations in Ethiopia; when 1,300 Soviet military advisers and 36,000 Cuban combat troops direct and participate in combat operations to prop up an unpopular, repressive regime in Angola; when hundreds of millions of dollars in Soviet arms and Soviet-made advisers help a dictatorial regime in Nicaragua try to subvert its neighbors and betray a popular revolution.

The danger inherent in these conflicts must be recognized. Marxist-Leninist regimes tend to wage wars as readily against their neighbors as they routinely do against their own people. In fact, the internal and external wars often become indistinguishable.

In Afghanistan, for example, the puppet regime has announced its intention to relocate tens of thousands of people from border areas. Can anyone doubt this will be done in classic Communist style — by force? Many will die, to make it easier for the Soviet and their satellite troops to intimidate Pakistan.

It is just such transgressions that make the risk of confrontation with democratic nations so acute. So, once again, I propose a three-point peace process for the resolution of regional conflicts: first, talks between the warring parties themselves, without which an end to violence and national reconciliation are impossible; second, discussions between the United States and Soviet Union — not to impose solutions, but to support peace talks and eventually eliminate the supply of arms and the proxy troops from abroad. And third, if the talks are successful, joint efforts to welcome each country back into the world economy and the company of nations that respect human rights.

The Threat

Of Terrorism

In addition to regional disputes, the grave threat of terrorism also jeopardizes the hopes for peace. No cause, no grievance, no injustice, no claim is so heinous and intolerable. It is the crime of cowards — cowards who threaten the innocent, the defenseless, the helpless.

With its allies and other nations, the United States has taken steps to counter terrorism directly — particularly state-sponsored terrorism. Last April, the United States demonstrated that it will defend its interests and act against terrorist aggression. Let me assure all of you today, especially the people of the Middle East, that the United States will continue to support the people of terrorism, that the American people are of one mind on this issue. Like other civilized peoples of the world, we have reached our limit. Attacks against our citizens or our interests will not go unanswered.

We will also do all in our power to help other law-abiding nations threatened by terrorist attacks. To that end, the United States believes that the seven industrial democracies at the Tokyo summit last May made a good start toward international accord in the war on terrorism. We recommend to the General Assembly consideration of the Tokyo resolutions.

Economic Growth:

Key Factors

Moving to the economic realm, how ironic it is that some continue to expose such ideas as a "new international economic order" based on state control when the state is learning, as never before, that the freedom of the individual, not the power of the state, is the key to economic dynamism and growth.

Nations have turned away from centralized management and government controls and towards the incentives and rewards of the free market. They have invited their citizens to develop their talents and abilities to the fullest aid, in the process, to provide jobs, to create wealth, to build social stability and foster faith in the future for all.

The economic summits of the industrial democracies have paid tribute to this principle — as has the historic U.N. Special Session on Africa in May. We applaud the African nations' call for reform leading to greater reliance on their private sector for economic growth. We believe that overcoming hunger and economic stagnation requires policies that encourage Africans' own productivity and initiative; such a policy framework will make it easier for the rest of the world, including the U.S., to help. The laws of economic incentives do not discriminate between developing and developed. They apply to all equally.

Much of the recent recovery in the world economy can be directly attributed to this growth of economic freedom. And it is this trend that offers such hope for the future. Yet this new hope faces a grave threat: the menace of trade barriers.

History shows the imposition of such barriers invites retaliation, retaliation which in turn sparks the very sort of trade wars that plunged the world in the 1930s deeper into depression and economic misery. Truly, protectionism is destructionism.

That is why the United States seeks the assistance of all countries represented in the General Assembly in protecting the principles of free and fair trade. We applaud the success of the meeting of GATT trade ministers last week in Uruguay, where agreement was reached to launch a new round of multilateral trade negotiations covering a wide range of topics important to economic growth. With over 90 other countries of the GATT, the United States is working to maintain the free flow of international trade.

In addition to resistance to protectionism, we must also encourage free seeking to stimulate world economic growth in other ways. Our Treasury interest rate is now just over 5 percent, the lowest it has been in nine years — which provides enormous relief to debtor countries. America's tax structure will ease the way for greater prosperity at home, which will contribute to greater prosperity abroad. Finally, the United States is working with other countries to minimize currency swings, to promote stability in the monetary markets, to establish predictability as a basis for prosperity.

But, the United States believes the greatest contribution we can make to world prosperity is the continued advocacy of the magic of the marketplace — the true and proven truth, that economic development is an outgrowth of economic freedom just as economic freedom is the inseparable twin of political freedom and democratic government.

The Importance

Of Human Rights

And it is here that we come to our final category — human rights — an indispensable element for peace, freedom and prosperity. I note that Mr. Gorbachev has used in recent speeches the same categories I have used here today: the military, the political, and the economic. Respect for human rights is not social work; it is not merely an act of compassion. It is the first obligation of government and the source of its legitimacy.

It also is the foundation stone in any structure of world peace. All through history, it has been the dictators and the tyrannies that have succeeded first to the cult of militarism and the pursuit of war. Countries based on the consent of the governed, countries that recognize the unalienable rights of the individual, do not make war on each other. Peace is more than just the absence of war. True peace is justice, true peace is freedom. And true peace dictates the recognition of human rights.

Commitments were made more than 10 years ago in Helsinki concerning these rights and their recognition. We need only look to the East today to see how sadly unfulfilled those commitments are. The persecution of scientists, religious leaders, peace activists, political dissenters and other prisoners of conscience continues unabated behind the Iron Curtain. You know, one section of the Helsinki accords even speaks to "improvement of working conditions of journalists."

So, it is clear that progress in the human rights area must keep pace with progress in other areas. A failure on this score will hinder further movement in East-West relations.

Twin Objectives

Of U.N. Charter

These, then, are the areas of concern and of opportunity that the United States sees in the quest for peace and freedom — the twin objectives of the U.N. Charter.

Last year, I pointed out in my address to the General Assembly the differences between the United States and the Soviet Union are deep and abiding. But I also called for a fresh start in relations between our two nations, a fresh start that could benefit our own people and the people of every nation. Since that time, the United States has taken action and the Soviet Union has taken action. The United States has taken action and the Soviet Union has taken action. The United States has taken action and the Soviet Union has taken action.

As I have said, I believe we can be hopeful about the world and the prospects for freedom. We need only look around us to see the new technologies that may someday spare future generations the nightmare of nuclear terror, or the growing ranks of democratic activists and freedom fighters, or the increasing movement toward free market economies, or the worldwide concern about the rights of the individual in the face of brute, state power.

In the past, when I have noted such trends — when I have called for a "forward strategy for freedom" and predicted the ultimate triumph of democratic rule over totalitarianism — some have accused me of telling people to hope for the best and do nothing to engage the day but to escape it.

Yet, to hope is to believe in humanity; and in its future. Hope remains the highest reality, the age-old power; hope is at the root of all the great ideas and causes that have bettered the lot of humankind across the centuries.

History teaches us to hope — it teaches us about man, and about the irrepressible human spirit. A Nobel laureate in literature, a great figure of the American South, William Faulkner, once said that the last word heard on earth would be that of the two remaining human arguing over where to go in the spaceship they had built.

In his speech to the Nobel committee in 1950, Faulkner spoke of the nuclear age, of the general and universal fear of destruction that had become almost unbearable. But he said, "I decline to accept the end of man. I believe that man will not merely endure; he will prevail. He is immortal — because he has a soul, a spirit capable of compassion and sacrifice and endurance."

Faulkner spoke of "the old verities and truths of the heart," of the courage, honor, pride, compassion, pity, sacrifice and, yes, that hope which is the glory of our past. And all of these things we find today in our present; we must use them to build our future. It is why today we can lift up our spirits and our hearts: it is why we resolve that with God's help the cause of humanity will not merely "endure but prevail"; it is why we believe that every person — will know the blessings of peace and see the light of freedom.

Live It up!

WEEKEND

is all you need.

Friday in

The

New York

Times